

Solomon's Tamuz

The watching of any planet has various points of choice to count its orbits from. There is no rule. The Tau of the planet Mars is an absence that becomes known as Tamuz when Nimrod dies. The absence is not exact, but averaged as 90 days as the sun crosses over it. In reality the sun doesn't cross it, but rather Mars is on the opposite side of orbit and the Earth moves faster around so that the sun appears to cross forward over it rather Mars cross forward behind it.

Because Mars is very elliptical, the average 780-day orbit can vary short as 767 days in 2020bc or long as 802 days in 2013bc. (chart D) Thus for Babel to derive its 364 calendar years 602 to 966 as being an average 13-year Mars of 780 days and 52-year Mars advancing a quarter-year season, or four quarters as 208 calendar years spanning 205 years is quite a feat of genius. Though simple math, the odds of being correct are in the hands of Jehovah not in the brilliance of man's mind.

The Tamuz of Mars for 1770bc is July 10 when Nimrod dies at the age of 500 and Mars then returns as July 10 in 997bc when then Solomon dies at age 54. But the Marduk calendar's 13-year cycle of the July 8 new year 2009bc (45 days after chart D) whose cycle epoch is the new year 2368bc Oct 1 then falls as the Oct 3 new year of 997bc. (chart E) This is well beyond the 45-day average from crossing to rising which is also the case in 1770bc when the actual crossing of July 10 is not expected in calendar until July 29 and its rise not expected until Sep 12 as date 9-01. The Marduk dates of Solomon's 997bc is 21 days after those in 1770bc, though the actual Mars is the about the same dates from July 10 to its rising.

Nimrod was not the issue of the Solomon Tamuz. Judah was born in Syria when Nimrod died at 500 and so the baby became regarded as a better replacement than Nimrod. This doesn't mean sit on Nimrod Melchizedek's throne as an inheritance but rather to be given Shem Melchizedek's throne which will take over and sit on Nimrod's. It is all high symbolism since neither Shem nor Nimrod ever had any throne. Nimrod was king in only two ways, as king of longevity being the last to die the longevity of a god; and, as great advisor whom everyone worshipped as advice-giver without perceiving bad results. Shem was passive and his rule was by his example of how to be, not by giving out commands. Example of his advice was telling Abram how to clean his penis by circumcision, and his ability after 450 years to then predict the day and hour of Sodom explosion.

Thus Solomon's Tamuz was meant for Jehovah, but it caused Israel and Judah to argue whose king star was it? The father Israel or the son Judah !
